Signal flags to K.u.K. Marines see Signal flags

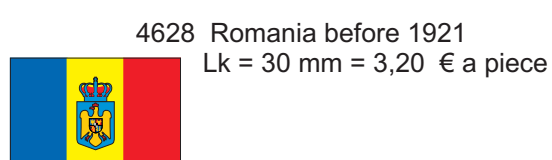

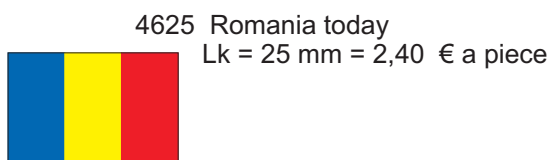

Tips for flag processing:

The flags are to be cut out by sharp scissors or a scalpel exactly along the color lines. No stripe of unprinted material is left over. With white flag fields at least half of the thin border line must be kept. By this you avoid fraying.

The flags are never glued or tied to a flag pole but always glued to a flag rope. To glue the leech to the rope we recommend Gütermann HT2 adhesive.

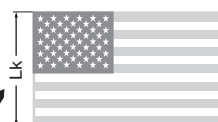

After hardening of the glue, the glued parts should be smoothed by an electric iron.

With flag chains (especially on pleasure steamers) some model makers use very thin wire instead of a flag rope. Other model makers imbrue the flag rope with liquid glue, so that the flags do not point by the drill of the rope in all directions.

There is some disagreement about the meaning of the letters FERT in the corners. They either mean
Fortitudo Eius Rhodum Tenuit
(His bravery held Rhodes)
or Foedere Et Religione Tenemur
(We are tied through contract and religion)

All marine flags show a mirror-image on their back side, including the eagles and other figures and letters or symbols. There are only very few exceptions, where the writing on a flag must be readable on the back side.

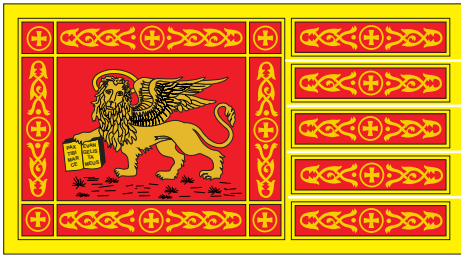

Commentary to No. 4727:
Several ship models show the royal standard. This is highly improbable, however, as the royal standards were flown only on the royal yachts or ships of the royal family. Misuse of the flags was prohibited. Exceptions were permitted only when the king himself was on board, for that short time only, or only a flag without crown was risen at the main mast. The flag had a green!! border.
